

Our mission is to provide children with the necessary financial literacy skills to navigate the complexities of the modern economy. Through engaging and interactive educational programs, we aim to empower children to make informed decisions about their finances and develop healthy financial habits that will serve them throughout their lives. We believe that every child deserves the opportunity to build a solid foundation of financial knowledge and skills, and we are committed to providing accessible and effective resources that will help them achieve their goals.

November 2023 Newsletter

Topic: How to Talk to Your Parents About Money (8-12-year-old kids edition)

Talking to your parents about money can be tough, especially if you're not sure how to start. But it's important to be able to talk to your parents about money, especially as you get older and start to learn more about financial responsibility.

Here are a few tips to help you talk to your parents about money:

1. Choose the right time. Don't try to talk to your parents about money when they're stressed or busy. Instead, pick a time when they're relaxed and have time to listen.
2. Start by saying something positive. For example, you could say something like, "I'm really interested in learning more about money. Can we talk about it?"
3. Be specific about what you want to talk about. Do you want to know how your parents budget? Are you interested in learning about investing? Or do you just want to talk about how to save money?
4. Be prepared to listen. Your parents may have a lot to teach you about money. Be open to their advice and be willing to learn from them.
5. Be honest and open. If you have any questions about money, don't be afraid to ask your parents. They're there to help you learn.

Here are a few specific questions that you could ask your parents about money:

- How do you budget your money?
- How do you save for big purchases?

- What are your financial goals?
- What do you think about investing?
- What financial advice would you give me?

Talking to your parents about money can be a great way to learn about financial responsibility and to build a strong relationship with them. By following these tips, you can make the conversation easier and more productive.

Here are a few additional tips for kids who are talking to their parents about money:

- Be respectful. Remember that your parents are the adults and they have more experience with money than you do.
- Be patient. It may take some time for your parents to open up to you about their finances.
- Be persistent. If you don't get the answers you want the first time, ask again later.

Talking to your parents about money can be tough, but it's important to be able to have these conversations. By following these tips, you can make the conversation easier and more productive.